Claimed Clairvoyant Abilities

Leadbeater possessed an extraordinary ability to perceive the so-called "astral plane" and other higher dimensions. He claimed to be able to clairvoyantly observe the lives of individuals, past and present, as well as the workings of the spiritual realms. These alleged abilities led him to become a sought-after spiritual counselor and guide.

Theosophical Teachings and Controversies

Leadbeater's teachings were deeply rooted in theosophical philosophy, emphasizing reincarnation, karma, and the evolution of the soul through multiple lives. He played a crucial role in developing the concept of the "Masters of Wisdom," a group of highly evolved beings believed to guide humanity from behind the scenes.

In 1918, Leadbeater co-founded the Liberal Catholic Church (LCC), a spiritual organization that incorporated Christian elements into theosophical teachings. The LCC emphasized the use of sacraments, rituals, and ceremonial magic to foster spiritual growth and connection with the divine.

Leadbeater's involvement in the LCC led to further controversies, as he faced accusations of promoting occultism and heresy. Despite the criticisms, the LCC gained a significant following and continues to operate as a spiritual organization today.

Excommunication and Legacy

In 1922, Leadbeater was expelled from the Theosophical Society due to allegations of sexual misconduct. This incident marked a significant turning point in his life, and he retired from public life, spending his final years in relative obscurity.
