Dick Dorworth had it all. He was a star athlete, a successful businessman, and a loving husband and father. But behind the façade of success, Dorworth was struggling with a secret addiction to drugs and alcohol.

Dorworth's addiction spiraled out of control, and he soon lost everything he had worked so hard for. He lost his job, his family, and his friends. He was even arrested and sent to prison.

But even in the darkest of times, Dorworth never gave up hope. He knew that he had to change his life, and he was determined to do whatever it took to get sober.

After his release from prison, Dorworth entered a drug and alcohol treatment program. It was there that he finally found the help he needed to overcome his addiction.

With the support of his newfound sobriety, Dorworth began to rebuild his life. He got a new job, reconnected with his family, and started volunteering his time to help others who were struggling with addiction.

In 1986, Dorworth founded The Straight Course, a non-profit organization dedicated to providing affordable drug and alcohol treatment to those who need it most.
